Melcher: landowner rights in peril

By MARK GROVE
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The U.S. Strip Mining Act, an important act to eastern Montana landowners, is being attacked in Congress, Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., told about 75 people in the UM Science Complex last night.

"This state has more coal that could be mined than most nations on earth," Melcher said. He added that the rights of landowners would be jeopardized if the act was weakened.

The "gut issues" of the Strip Mining Act took a great deal of effort to get congressional acceptance and they are still in danger of being "guttled," Melcher said. He said that surface owner's consent, a provision of the act which gives a landowner the right to approve or disapprove the strip mining of coal on his property, is under pressure because the coal under his land belongs to the government.

"The land itself and the person who owns the land are more important than the government's right to that coal," Melcher said.

He said the ban on strip mining coal on irrigated farmland was also "under serious attack." The law states that coal mining should not disturb the water aquifer on the mining site or down stream from it.

This "gut issue" is under attack because oftentimes there is $100,000 worth of coal under one acre of land in these areas, Melcher said.

"But it is not necessary to mine all the land right now," Melcher said.

On the topic of forestry management in Montana Melcher said the Resource Planning Act is essential to improved land use.

Under the act the secretary of agriculture must assess all U.S. forest lands and focus on the important problems dealing with management. He then presents his assessment to the president who will state a national policy on forest management.

Melcher said that under the act range land, timber stand and reforestation improvements will aid in managing the land for multiple use.

Melcher also said Congress should tell the Forest Service to drop its RARE II study. RARE II is the Forest Service's evaluation of the uses of the roadless areas in the country. He said the study is adequate as it is and the Forest Service should move on to resource planning policies.

Any more decisions on wilderness allocation should go directly to Congress, he said.

Group plans to picket Duke lecture

By GREG GADBERRY
Montana Kaimin Reporter

A group of anti-David Duke activists will apparently picket the ex-Klansman's speech here Feb. 18.

Plans for the picket were made yesterday at an informal meeting sponsored by the Student Action Center. But little is known about the picket as a Montana Kaimin reporter was asked to leave the meeting.

About 12 people attended the meeting, held at the University Center. Participants discussed the possibility of a picket and also the distribution of information about Duke and his past affiliation with the Ku Klux Klan.

But when it was learned that a Kaimin reporter was present at the meeting, several participants asked the reporter to leave.

Participants Jim Wheeler and Alan Hoyt told the reporter that no strategy for possible anti-Duke activities could be discussed with the reporter present. No SAC member was present at the meeting when the reporter was asked to leave.

The reporter left but soon returned with an editor. The two Kaimin staffers told the participants that since the meeting was sponsored by SAC — a group funded by student money — it should be open.

Midwifery bill debated

By CATHY KRADOLFER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA — The merits of home versus hospital births were debated before a legislative committee yesterday, as mothers clashed with doctors and nurses over a bill that would legalize and regulate the practice of midwifery.

Supporters of Missoula Rep. Ann Mary Dussault's bill told the House Public Health Committee that women who choose to have their children at home should be afforded the care of a midwife licensed and certified by the state.

Dussault, a Democrat, said the committee would have to make a philosophical decision about whether birth is a natural process which can occur at home, "or whether it is a disease that must be treated at a hospital."

Opponents of the bill included representatives from the Montana Nurses Association and the Montana Hospital Association and several obstetricians. Their criticism centered on whether

University funding opens marathon budget session

By CATHY KRADOLFER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA — The first round of a five-day budgeting marathon begins today in Helena with hearings on university funding.

At 7:30 a.m., the presidents of the University of Montana, Eastern Montana College and Western Montana College will present and defend their budgets to the Joint Appropriations Subcommittee on Education. Whether the colleges and universities win round one should be known by Saturday.

In documents presented to the subcommittees last week, the six schools in the university system praised a new funding formula which gives the system about $38 million more than last year — but each has complaints about programs they want included.

UM has the longest list of reservations about the budget proposed by the Legislature's fiscal analyst's office. The areas UM wants more money for include:

- faculty salaries. The fiscal analyst is recommending a 9 percent salary increase in addition to an increase bringing salaries in line with other western schools. The Board of Regents and the university want a 12 percent increase.

- program modifications. UM wants $1.3 million to fund a master's program in social work, additional research and additional computer equipment. Those additions are not included in the fiscal analyst's budget.

- public service programs such as KUFR, the Montana Repertory Theatre and the Office of Publications and Media Relations.

- physical plant. UM wants a one-time appropriation of about $500,000 for maintenance projects such as painting and cleaning that were deferred to pay for costs associated with increased enrollments. The money would be in addition to the $2.3 million recommended by the fiscal analyst for the entire system.

UM is also contesting the fiscal analyst's projections of money coming into the university from sources other than state funds, and is projecting a $405,000 deficit for the biennium.

The six members of the subcommittee will sort through these and other complaints, question enrollment and revenue estimates and, in the end, come up with a recommendation for the six units. First, though, the subcommittee must decide whether it wants to use a new method of funding the universities — and the six schools will have to convince committee members of the worth of the new formula before they move into the "frill" requests.

Since 1977, Montana's universities and colleges have been funded on an enrollment-driven, student-faculty ratio. After an 18-month study, an interim legislative committee came up with a new formula for allocating money to the schools — one which attempts to raise money and funding levels to that of other western schools, and provides money for high-cost graduate and undergraduate programs and an emergency fund for unplanned enrollment increases.

Both the regents and the fiscal analyst agreed with the concepts in the new formula and both used it in calculating their respective budget recommendations. But it is still up to the Legislature, in particular the subcommittee, whether to use the formula.

"The subcommittee can use all of it, some of it, or none of it," Curtis Nichols, senior legislative fiscal analyst, said recently. "If they think 19:1 would work better they can do that, too."

The subcommittee members have already questioned whether Montana schools should be compared with other schools. Some, like the committee's chairman, Rep. Gene Donaldson, R-Helena, worry that tying Montana's funding to "peer" institutions will take away the individuality of its schools.

And committee members are questioning how well the formula addresses the needs of the schools when the written testimony those schools have presented raises objections to parts of the formula.

"It seems to me the schools have a lot of objections to a formula that they first said was going to provide all the answers," Rep. Esther Bengtson, D-Shepherd, said.

Donaldson hopes the committees can work through all the problems by Saturday afternoon. He is allowing UM an hour and a half for testimony today and another hour on Friday when the issue of salaries is discussed.

The committee wants to get all its budget recommendations to the full House Appropriations Committee by Feb. 28. After that, the committee and the House will vote on the proposal before sending it to the Senate.

Let's not throw midwives in the slammer

Montana's questionable practice of attaching criminal status to lay midwives may be forced into an abrupt about-face if a bill sponsored by Missoula Democratic Rep. Ann Mary Dussault becomes law.

Both the intent and structure of Dussault's measure are excellent. It would provide for the establishment of a state panel of medical professionals to certify lay midwives, and remove the possibility of fining them up to $1,000 and jailing them for a year.

There are only three legally practicing midwives in Montana, mainly because they must be registered nurses and certified by the American College of Nurse-Midwifery. Dussault's bill, on the other hand, would require that a lay midwife pass a series of periodic examinations and have assisted in at least 30 professionally supervised births.

The bill underwent a committee hearing yesterday and will probably face a vote today. A do-pass recommendation would be a step in the right direction.

Opponents of the bill, who are for the most part members of the medical profession, believe that passage of the measure would be tantamount to practicing medicine without a license.

But that's an excellent reason why the bill should become law. People would, for a change, be able to tell the difference between those who are qualified to supervise home births and those who are not.

But the practical nature of the situation must be considered. Having a baby in a hospital is expensive, and many women despise the stainless-steel atmosphere. They prefer the more congenial surroundings of the home, and for that reason there will always be home births whether midwives gain legal status or not.

According to testimony given at the hearings, nine out of 10 births occur normally and could safely take place at home. The 10 percent or so that do not is what concerns the medical profession. They reason that lay midwives could not deal with complications arising in a home birth.

This argument is valid only to a point, because properly certified midwives should be able to recognize a problem in the making and get a woman to a hospital. The status quo is dangerous, mainly because the ability of lay midwives to recognize dangerous situations may be clouded by the realization that they face possible criminal charges if they take a woman to a hospital.

All of this is not to say whether women who choose the option of home birth are right or wrong. Since the beginning of time, women have given birth in plenty of places other than hospitals, and those places have been for the most part of their own choosing.

Women who want to have babies at home will do so. There is no evidence to suggest that the criminal status of lay midwives serves as a deterrent to the practice. Since law serves only one other function, retribution, legislators should ask themselves whether government has any business exacting revenge on those who assist in home births.

Like so many other issues, this is a matter of personal choice, whether government likes it or not. Curtailing that freedom of choice is futile and unnecessary, and Dussault's measure deserves to become law.

Scott Hagel

Out of hand

Editor: Personally, I don't care for Nixon or Mein Kampf. And I'll admit that I do have a few roadside nature pictures. But I do care about wiping dog turds off my two-year-old, cracked and worn Converse All-Stars. And no, I'm not out to get all dogs because I happen to enjoy them very much.

It just seems that you have gotten a little out of hand in your railings against the so-called "dog haters."

I wonder who is the bigger dog hater—the ones who would like to see a little responsibility shown by the owners, or the ones who: 1) leave their dogs tied to trees for a couple of hours in below zero weather or 2) let them stand outside the Commons and bark for a couple of hours while the owner enjoys a third cup of coffee or 3) ties him to a sprinkler system and lets the poor damn dog get sprayed for a couple of hours. Just a few incidents I've seen.

As for earthiness—please, I'll take a dirt path rather than sit in some dogshit this spring in "Mammary Park," and if the dogs are responsible for the liberal arts tradition here at Missoula, I guess my years of education here can be attributed to the dogs?

Fear of ourselves

Editor: Who is David Duke and why is everyone afraid of him?

It would seem that this one man's presence on our hallowed and sacred campus has stirred our feelings that we are somehow going to grow white sheets and project feelings of hate and look on other people that are different from our own race, sex, social class, and religious beliefs as vermin that should be exterminated.

Well, these are things that are part of each and every person and it is this fear of ourselves that clouds our own view of reality.

I do not believe that money should have been spent without the input of the student body and I feel that other arrangements could have been made. But since the die has been cast, so to speak, we should take this incident and use it to put our own feelings and moral beliefs in a more positive stance and for those that feel unwilling or unable to deal with the darkness of our souls then please don't transmit your virus to less informed and more misplaced emotional students; if you do you are playing the same game that Duke is and there is no difference in my opinion of the use of fear and other emotional trickery to foment counter-hate.

Hate and discrimination is in all of us and we have to face this more realistically than passing it on to others that are not equipped to deal with themselves realistically.

Real selfishness

Editor: In Thursday's Kaimin, (Feb. 5), Don Partain passes judgment on women who choose the option of abortion in response to an unwanted pregnancy. According to Mr. Partain, these women are guilty, guilty of a most horrible sin, selfishness. Because Mr. Partain speaks from outside the realm of the actual experience, unwanted pregnancy, an example from within this experience may serve to enlighten us regarding selfishness.

An 18-year-old woman finds herself pregnant. She has been using birth control, but it has failed her. Her lover is not interested in a baby and quickly edges himself out of the picture. This woman is faced with a difficult decision. She has recently graduated from high school but has not yet entered the job market. Even if she had a job, her pay would not support her because she is a woman and will receive the wages of a woman. Her society assumes she will have a man to provide for her. She reaches a decision about this pregnancy. Nine months later she gives birth to a girl child. She is now a mother with a child at her breast. This child is very important to her, the focal point of her life, dependent upon her for its survival. Should she go out and find work to support this child? Wean the child and bring it to someone else for care? She decides against this, the thought of $2.00 an hour and all day away from the small person at her breast convinces her. But, how will she support this child? She turns to the Department of Public Welfare. Certainly giving birth to, supporting, and nurturing a child are important responsibilities. She will depend upon welfare to get her and the child through these early years. But she has forgotten, in her culture a woman with a child is not important, unless she belongs to a man. She does not belong to a man. Her child is not as important as making bombs. She is given $100.00 a month and some food stamps. This is the beginning of this woman's story. For the next ten years she gives of herself. She is a very determined young woman. She accepts the meager welfare checks, works for below-dignity wages, pushing on for that child and her own dreams. She fights the despair of poverty, it wraps itself around her body like a second skin. But she sheds it again and again, each new skin brighter than the one before.

Ten years after the birth of her child, this woman decides to return to school. If she can get an education she may be able to throw off the welfare bonds, at least be paid enough to support herself. She wants, more than anything, to get off the welfare merry-go-round. She is still a woman with a child and in these 10 years her society has learned so little. She is wise enough to know that even with a college education her wages are likely to be half of what they would be if she were a man. The time is ripe for this particular woman. She has nurtured her child, guided her and provided for her. She sees a child with an intense sensitivity, self-confidence and most importantly, a love for life. In spite of the lack of rewards for her contributions, she has not lost the hope that perhaps her efforts will be acknowledged. Just at this point in her life, she is forced to stop in disbelief. She is pregnant. It's the same anguish all over again. She has given much of herself to her child and that child will be a vital part of the society that spit on its mother. No one in power gives a damn about that beautiful child with her love for life. The woman makes a decision about this pregnancy. She cannot face the thought of those meager welfare checks, the intense poverty and despair. Could she give birth and give the child away? What would she tell her first child, and how would she live with herself? Could she simply say that she was giving birth but must give the baby away to someone with money? She knows she could never explain that to a 10-year-old. She has an abortion.

A woman choosing not to give birth to a child she cannot care for, whatever her reasons, is doing the most selfless thing possible. Women are not baby machines, waiting to give birth and send the product away. Once pregnant, a woman must reach decisions regarding the implications of her pregnancy. Those decisions rest with her alone. Women do not want to bring unwanted children into the world, and every adopted, battered, and unloved child knows he was originally unwanted. Women want to raise their children with joy and respect. The real selfishness lies at the heart of a culture that denies equal opportunities to women. Real selfishness eats itself sick in the brains of a culture that puts its resources into death and rape. Real selfishness lives a good life among those who negate the contributions of women and desire only to impose their personal moral standards without regard to the various circumstances of others lives which may be missing from their own.

Griz win on road, lose at home

By CLARK FAIR
Montana Kaimin Sports Editor

The Montana Grizzlies men's basketball team swept another pair of games on a road trip, the Lady Grizzlies dropped two to the Oregon powerhouses, and the UM women's gymnastics team was narrowly defeated in Spokane, Wash.

Such were the fortunes and misfortunes for University of Montana varsity teams last weekend.

The Grizzlies traveled to Northern Arizona University last Thursday, pulled ahead of the Lumberjacks early and held on for a 64-56 victory.

On Saturday, the Grizzlies invaded Wolfpack territory at Nevada-Reno University and came away with a hard-fought 60-58 win. The top scorer in Thursday's game was senior guard Craig Zanon with 16 points. Zanon scored only 11 points on Saturday as senior guard Blaine Taylor captured the scoring honors with 18 points.

The two wins moved the Grizzlies to 14-7 on the season, 7-2 in the Big Sky Conference, good enough to remain within one game of first-place Montana State University.

The Lady Grizzlies were not so lucky. The University of Oregon (ranked 17th in the nation) and Oregon State University visited Montana and treated their hosts rather unkindly.

Against Oregon Thursday night, the Lady Griz were unable to stop Bev Smith, last year's most valuable player in the league, as the 6-foot-1 guard-forward poured in a game-high 38 points in leading her team to an 89-57 victory.

Oregon State on Saturday night featured a different, though hardly less potent, weapon in 6-foot-5 All-American center Carol Menken.

Menken, after a relatively quiet first half, exploded for 17 of her 26 points in the second 20 minutes as her team pulled away from the stubborn Montana team and won, 77-69.

For the Grizzlies, the top scorer both nights was senior center Jill Greenfield, who collected 44 points in the series, giving her a career total of 812, only one point shy of the record held by former Lady Grizzly Linda Deden Smith.

The Lady Grizzlies are now 15-7 overall and 3-3 in the Mountain Division of the Northwest Women's Basketball League. Their weekend losses dropped them into a second-place tie with Washington State University, who they have beaten already this season.

Leading the division is Eastern Washington University with a 4-2 record. Neither EWU nor WSU has played the two Oregon schools yet this season.

This weekend, the men's team hosts Idaho State University on Friday and Weber State College on Saturday. Thursday, the Lady Griz go to Bozeman to play Montana State.

The UM women's gymnastics team was in Spokane last Friday, competing against Spokane Community College, a team they had beaten already this season.

But this time, the team went without the benefit of Cathy Sowl, a performer in the all-around competition, who had to stay behind to take an exam.

Sowl's absence may have been the determining factor as Montana was edged out 122.7-121.7.

There were two particularly bright spots in the meet for Montana. In the all-around, Kari Shepherd and Shawn Leary both had their personal bests for the year and finished in first and second place respectively.

Shepherd scored 31.55 points, finishing second in the uneven parallel bars and third in the vault and balance beam.

Leary scored 30.9 points and placed second in the balance beam.

The next meet for the gymnastics team will be Feb. 20 against Boise State University, the defending Division II Regional Champs.

The meet starts at 7 p.m. in the field house annex.

LADY GRIZZLY CHERI BRATT holds the ball away from the probing hands of University of Oregon's Angie Snider during first-half action Thursday night in the Dahlberg Arena. Bratt managed only four points in this contest but scored a game-high 19 points Saturday against Oregon State University. (Photo by Clark Fair.)

Those who, while they disapprove of the character and measures of a government, yield to it their allegiance and support are undoubtedly its most conscientious supporters, and so frequently the most serious obstacles to reform.

THE BEATLES IN YELLOW SUBMARINE AND LET IT BE

Yellow Submarine (1968), an inspired animated feature by George Dunning (based on a whimsical John Lennon fantasy and the resulting Lennon-McCartney song), finds the boys bouncing through a lively series of adventures en-route to Pepperland to save the populace and Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band from the un-musical, fascist oppression of the Blue Meanies. Each episode relates a different style of pop art to a particular Beatles song (Eleanor Rigby, Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds, Nowhere Man, All You Need is Love and others), and the film succeeds in creating very satisfying characterization of performers already known and beloved by its audience. With its unusual, highly imaginative ideas and its many experiments in artistic style and technique, Yellow Submarine stands as a milestone in animation history. One of the Fab Four's last appearances together, Let It Be (1970) finds them all looking a bit older and a bit harrier with John's new wife, Yoko Ono, looking enigmatically at the camera from the sidelines.

The Beatles get together to jam, play old favorites and work on new material, reminisce about their early days in the '60s, and finally have a big recording session on the roof of Apple, which attracts even the cops. John signs off with, "I want to thank you on behalf of the group and I hope we have passed the audition!" Color.

Jock snaps over Valentine gift.

Dear Ann:

Athletically I'm an All-American. Romantically I'm a nerd. I'm in love with a fox. But the competition is rough. What'll I give her for Valentine's Day? Nervously Yours,
Chicken Hunk

Dear Chicken:

Don't punt. Send her flowers. It's probably the best play you ever made. And the easiest. Just go to your nearest FTD Florist. He has the perfect Valentine gift. A beautiful bouquet that comes in a special bud vase. Even better, you can afford it. Remember, when in doubt, rely on the magic of flowers. It's the only way a chicken can catch a fox. Good hunting.

Helping you say it right.

The FTD Valentine Bud Vase is usually available for less than $10.00. As an independent businessman, each FTD Florist sets his own prices. Service charges and delivery may be additional. *1981 Florists' Transworld Delivery.

Rock concert hatches violence and injuries

By EDWIN BENDER
Montana Kaimin Reporter

It was advertised as "music from the heart of the rock n' roll jungle," and Friday night's Molly Hatchet concert stirred up some pretty primordial instincts. Sam Goza, pop concert director, said that "a lot of overly drunk people" were at the concert and that there were more fights than usual. But Goza would not speculate on the number of fights at the concert.

Ken Willett, head of Campus Security, said that while he was at the concert he helped clean glass out of a cut for a concert-goer who had apparently been elbowed and had his glasses broken.

"It was wild," Willett said, adding, "a lot of people came (to the concert) pretty well schnockered." Goza said two people were taken to a detoxification center.

Willett said one person was taken to the hospital in an ambulance due to an apparent drug overdose. This could not be verified.

Goza said four people from the Outreach Team of the Missoula Crisis Center and from the Quick Response Unit helped deal with all the sick and injured people at the concert.

Goza said he looked into the emergency workers' area once during the night and almost became sick.

Sometime during the night, Goza said, some tapes belonging to the band were stolen from the mixing console.

Despite all this, Goza said, the concert was a great financial success with over 5,600 people attending the concert. At $8 a ticket, $9 at the door, Goza said, the gross receipts for the concert will be over $46,000, of which ASUM gets 7 percent.

Former Carter aide speaking here tonight

Jack Watson Jr., White House chief of staff for former President Carter, will lecture tonight at 8 in the University of Montana law school library.

The lecture, entitled "Politics, Public Service and the Presidency," is the fourth in the Blankenbaker Foundation lecture series, sponsored by the UM law school with funds from the Blankenbaker Foundation.

Before becoming the chief of staff, Watson worked as Assistant to the President for Intergovernmental Affairs and Secretary to the Cabinet. In these roles, Watson was responsible for developing direct relationships between the White House and state and local governments. Also, he worked with federal agencies in carrying out the president's program and policy.

Watson served as the chairman of the Commission on Alcohol in Georgia when Carter was governor. He was appointed a member of the board of the Georgia Department of Human Resources when the agency was created and subsequently served as chairman for five years.

During the 1976 presidential campaign, Watson helped in the Carter/Mondale policy planning office and later managed the transition into the White House.

The Blankenbaker Foundation was founded in 1975 by Joseph Blankenbaker "to express his thanks to the people of Montana for treating him so well."

The Blankenbaker Foundation provides annual funding to the UM law school to provide educational programs in professional responsibility.

midwives would be adequately trained under provisions of the bill.

Betsy Scanlon, an attorney from Red Lodge, told the committee that home births are not dangerous and "infinitely safer than having no one with any training present." She said the number of home births has doubled in four years from 93 to 188.

The bill provides for a board of midwives to license and administer examinations to those who are trained in assisting in home births. Under present Montana law, midwives can be fined $1,000 and jailed for up to one year.

Only registered nurses, who are also certified as midwives, can now aid in home births. The bill would allow lay people to assist in home births if they pass the test and undergo training.

The care provided by lay midwives, who would be required to have only a high school degree, would be "second rate," according to Cindy Keyser, a nurse and midwife from Butte.

Judy Olson, representing the Montana Nurses Association, questioned whether midwives could provide adequate care.

But Rep. Steve Waldron, D-Missoula, said that prenatal care and good training for midwives makes the chances of problems occurring "very small."

Waldron, who sponsored a similar bill last session, said it is "sheer idiocy" to try to prevent home births.

The committee will probably vote on the bill today. Dussault said she expects a "do pass" recommendation from the committee but is uncertain about its chances for approval in the House.

SAC to ask for more money from CB

By MIKE DENNISON
Montana Kaimin Reporter

As the result of a verbal agreement made last spring with Central Board, the Student Action Center is asking the board for $2,600 to cover a deficit incurred over the Group . . .

However, SAC Director Jim Weinberg said last night he knew nothing of SAC sponsoring the meeting until reading about it late yesterday afternoon in the "weekend" column of Friday's Kaimin. Weinberg was in Helena Friday and Saturday.

"It was unbeknownst to me that SAC was sponsoring it — and I am not pleased," Weinberg said.

"People apparently used SAC to sponsor the meeting," he said. "SAC had no role in the meeting. SAC in no way, shape or form advocates or endorses any protest at the scene of Mr. Duke's lecture."

The Montana open meetings law states that "all meetings of public or governmental bodies . . . supported in whole or in part by public funds . . . shall be open to the public."

Hoyt and Wheeler disagreed. They said that strategy for possible anti-Duke activities would have to be discussed at a later private meeting.

Reached after the meeting, Hoyt said that the group had decided to both form a picket and also to distribute information about Duke and the KKK.

He said that plans for other types of protests were not made at the meeting.

1979-80 academic year.

Jim Weinberg, SAC director, said he will present his request to ASUM's Budget and Finance Committee today. If the committee does not recommend that CB allocate the full amount, Weinberg said he would take his request directly to CB.

All special allocations requests must be reviewed by the committee, which provides CB with a recommendation. CB then votes on those recommendations, but can amend them.

Weinberg said CB agreed last spring to pay for SAC's 1979-80 deficit, for SAC was only one of six student groups to have its executive recommendation for funds cut by the board.

ASUM's executive committee, comprised of the ASUM president, vice president and business manager, had recommended SAC receive $16,950 — CB then cut that down to $13,000, the largest cut any group received.

SAC's deficit then was thought to be about $1,800, Weinberg said, but the recent discovery of an $800 Missoulian printing bill upped it to the present $2,600 total.

The $800 bill for printing SAC's newspaper was issued more than a year ago and was paid two weeks ago, Weinberg said.

Ron Stief, last year's SAC director who now lives in Berkeley, Calif., said Friday he knew about the deficit, and that it was caused by costs for printing and other 1979-80 SAC projects, like Nuclear Awareness Week.

"We told everyone that a bill for just under $2,000 would be there," Stief said. "We were all aware of it."

Weather or Not

My Lord, thought Chris, this is a regular secret agents' ball. The worst part was that Chris was the guest of honor.

Suddenly, the wall exploded. Through the rubble came several uniformed men led by a tall army colonel. He addressed Chris: "Army Intelligence (Impossible, thought Chris) informed us of the high (12) risk of your situation. I'm Col. Stephen Maddox of the Swine Patrol, and we're not to be trifled with!"

"That's 'trifled,' sir," corrected the low (minus 10) voice of his assistant, Lt. Christopher Crass.

"Right," acknowledged Maddox. "Herring! Svenson! Keep these agents at bay while we make our getaway through the variable clouds and scattered snow showers."
